

PARENTAL TREATMENT STYLES AS PERCEIVED BY CHILDREN AND ITS RELATION WITH RESPONSIBILITY AMONG MIDDLE SCHOOL STUDENTS IN SAUDI ARABIA

Hanan Asaad khouj
foundations is Associate Professor
Faculty of Arts and Humanities
Department of Psychology
King Abdul Aziz University

Abstract_ The present study aimed to identify the relationship between parental treatment methods as perceived by children and social responsibility, as well as prediction of social responsibility through parental treatment methods (warmth / love, aggression / hostility, neglect / indifference, rejection is not specified). It was a linking use descriptive method (130) male and female pupils in grade intermediate stage in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. The researcher used a questionnaire acceptance / rejection parental. Licensed to legalize the safety Mamdouhh (1987) and a measure of social responsibility prepared by the researcher. Using the Pearson correlation coefficient and multiple regression analysis study showed a positive relationship and statistically significant between the recognition of children to accept parental (warmth / love) and between each of personal responsibility and moral responsibility and social responsibility and the total score, and the presence of a negative relationship and statistically significant between the recognition of children of parental acceptance (aggression / hostility, neglect / indifference, rejection is not specified) and between each of personal responsibility and moral responsibility, community responsibility and the total score, and the style of warmth / love and who interpreted worth 46.10% of the variance in social responsibility.*

Key words: Parental styles-social responsibility-middle school students.