

PSYCHOLOGICAL ALIENATION AND ITS RELATIONSHIP TO THE PSYCHOLOGICAL SECURITY AMONG UNIVERSITY STUDENTS CASE STUDY ON STUDENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF PRINCESS NORA BINT ABDULRAHMAN WHO LIVING IN UNIVERSITY CITY

REEM SALEM ALI ALKERAIDEES
Department of Psychology
Faculty of Education
Princess Nora Bint Abdul Rahman University

ABSTRACT_ Aimed to identify the relationship between psychological alienation and psychological security, and to identify the differences in the variables of the study because of the variable for (Residency -type specialization- Cumulative average). study sample consist of 200 female students from the University of Princess Noura Bint Abdul rahman who living in university city. The results led to the existence of a negative inverse relationship between the total score to measure the psychological alienation and the total score for the scale of psychological security, there are differences in the total score to measure the psychological alienation because of the length of stay variable for the benefit of students who the duration of their stay less than two years, the lack of statistical significance in each of the differences psychological alienation and psychological security belonging to different type of specialization, there are significant differences in psychological alienation in favor of students who esteem (good or less), no statistically significant differences in psychological security for the benefit of students who the duration of their stay more than three years, there are no significant differences in psychological security belonging to different cumulative average.*

KEY WORD: Psychological alienation, psychological security, university city.